Begin Puts Limit On Habib's Effort To Resolve Crisis

By William Claiborne

No. 30,570

Washington Post Service
JERUSALEM — Israeli Prime finister Menachem Begin said Monster Menachem negm said Monday that there is a limit to how long Israel can wait for success of U.S. diplomatic efforts to defuse the crisis over Syrian missiles in Lebanons because of a continued Syrian military buildup

Mr. Begin did not say what the time limit is, nor did he indicate that he has given up on the shuttle diplomacy of Philip C. Habib, the U.S. special envoy who is expected to return to the region early next

But the prime minister empha-lized that diplomatic attempts to end the Syrian-Israeli confrontation had yielded no practical reof course there is a limit," Mr. Hearn said. "I won't say what that 'limit is, but it is impossible to carry talks back, and forth without any practical result."

'A Serious Negotiation'

He noted that Syrian surface-toair missile batteries are still in cen-tral Lobanon, Syria has offered no commitment not to fire missiles deployed inside Syria at overflying Israeli aircraft, and Syrian forces are still attacking Israeli supported Lebanese Christian forces in the Sannin mountain range as well as beseiging, the Christian city of

Mr. Begin stressed that Israel does not seek war with Syria, and he reiterated his pledge that Israeli-armed forces will not attack Syria unless attacked first. But implicit in his remarks was the threat that il initimately Israeli warplanes would strike against the missiles if they are not removed. Mr. Begin repeated the time limitation in an interview recorded for U.S. television, saying that when Mr. Habib returns, he will ask him, "Philip, my friend, how long is it going to last? We cannot wait for an indefinite period. How long is it going to last? It should be a serious tregotiation. A serious regotiation should bring results."

Begin: Limited Patience

Mr. Begin said Israel's air force could destroy the missiles in two hours, but that he has waited because he believed there was a in the Christian city of Zahle. But he added, "there is a limit to pushed the Lebanese toll to more such patience. There must be a limit to such patience."

His oblique warning when viewed against the backdrop of the quickening pace of his campaign for re-election in the June 30 national election, closely followed zivil war. Beirut newspapers called Mr. Begin's recent pattern of mix-the bombardment "the beach Mr. Begin's recent pattern of mixing strident anti-Syrian rhetoric as prime minister with demonstrable military restraint in his role as Isracl's defense minister.

This tactic - at least for as loog as the missile crisis remains in a state of suspended animation appears to have guaranteed Mr.
Begin a dominance in public exposure over his rival, opposition Labor Party leader Shimon Peres. It has also co-opted from issues on campaign arsenal the issues on which Mr. Begin is most vulnerable - such as a 130-percent annual inflation rate and the deterioration of all sectors of Israel's economy.

Mr. Begin also tacitly confirmed on Monday reports that he had hirned down requests by the Reagan administration to suspend Israeli strikes against Palestinian guerrilla positions in Lebanon un-til Mr. Habib completes his diplomatic mission.

'Continue to Strike

Israeli sources said that the U.S. ambassador to Israel, Samuel W. Lewis, in two meetings with Mr. Begin last week, had transmitted a request by Mr. Habib for a mora-torium on Israeli air strikes against the guerrillas, arguing that they would only harden Syria's position and make it more difficult for Saumake it more difficult for Sau-di Arabia in its efforts to mediate an agreement between Samediate an agreement between Syria, Lebanon and —indirectly—question of to what extent Syria is preparing for war, and whether the preparations are defensive or of-lensive. Mr. Begin alluded to that debate when he said Monday that the Syrian forces have been conducting manuevers, and have bol-stered their numbers in Lebanon and close to the Lebanese border.

In a background paper issued to foreign journalists and attributed to military intelligence analysts, the Israeli defense forces warned that "wide-ranging preparations are being completed in all branches of the Syrian armed forces. These preparations are not only defensive in nature, but also enable the Syrians to initiate an offensive against Israel - both on the Lebanese and Golan Heights theaters of actions."

The military preparedness moves, the report said, include reinforcing the SAM missile bat-teries, building trenches and earthwork fortifications; large-scale movement of troops; deployment of a tank brigade along the Lebanese border, movement of an infantry battalion seven miles (about 11 kilometers) north of the Israeli border, and the call-up of thousands of reservists.

Some military sources here maintain that Syria is eager to provoke at least a limited clash with Israel — possibly a war of attrition. But forceful arguments are also being made in the defense es-tablishment that the buildup reflects a brinksmanship policy, designed to influence the negotiations more than establish a base

New British Economic Forecasts Darken Outlook for Thatcher

By R.W. Apple Jr. New York Times Service

LONDON - Powerful political winds are buffeting Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and no early improvement in the weather seems likely unless she changes her eco-nomic policies in ways that she has sworn never to do.

No fewer than four independent economic analyses were published on Monday, and all of them predicted a continued rise in unemployment, already at a postwar record of more than 2.5 million. Not one of them lent the slightest support to recent assertions by government ministers that recovery is on the way.

Almost 100,000 people, by po-lice estimate, gathered in Trafalgar Square Sunday for the largest dem-onstration of its kind since the war. It marked the climax of the trade union March for Jobs, which left Liverpool on May 1 with 200 persons. Michael Foot, leader of the Labor Party, promised "to re-store the practical ideal of full employment to the central place it must bold in any civilized society."

To the more centrist of the ministers in Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative government - those known in British political slang as the "wets' - these developments and others seem to be a formula for political catastrophe, even though the next election need not be held before 1984. They are making their voices heard as never before, not only within the party but also through leaks to the press.

Mrs. Thatcher has been forced, as a result, to grant something she has staumchly resisted since taking office more than two years ago, a detailed review of economic policy in which all Cabinet members will be beard. Up to now, economic policy has been decided by a small nner circle composed exclusively

According to ber aides, the prime minister hopes to turn a tactical reversal into a strategic triumph. Wider discussion, she believes, will lead to a reaffirmation of present policy and entitle ber to demand a higher standard of loyalty from the Cabinet. But the move is an obvious gamble, born of acversity, because it could also lead to the development of an alterna-nive economic strategy designed to win the next election for the Conservative Party.

Such a strategy would have to be forced on Mrs. Thatcher by the "wets," who may be approaching a majority in the Cabinet. Despite ngly releasess deteriors tion of the economy, she remains convinced, as she said in the debate on the budget in March that her fiscal program constitutes "the only hope for Britain."

To show ber determination, she last month dismissed the navy minister, Keith Speed, after be argued publicly that ber demands for spending cuts would cripple the royal navy. Then, underlining the point, she abolished the posts of the navy, air force and army secretaries in lessen the effectiveness of political lobbying by the uni-formed leaders of the armed services for more funds.

Since then, Sir Geoffrey and Mrs. Thatcher have publicly pro-posed 3-percent to 5-percent re-ductions in the spending of all departments of state except defense. It appears unlikely that they will achieve that goal. Grave Instability

Although the immediate threat of a civil war appeared to have ended, diplomats and others famil-iar with Bangladesh were forecasting a period of grave instability, growing out of President Zia's death. (Like many people in Bangladesh, Gen. Zia used his first name as a surname and dropped the last two letters, which are used only as an article in conjunction with the secood name.)

The acting president, former Supreme Court Justice Abdas Sattar, is a caretaker figure in his 70s, and there is oo obvious successor to President Zia, who has been the dominant figure in Bangladeshi politics for five years. Thus fears vere being expressed about another long, bloody power struggle, such as the period of instability that followed the assassination of ther of the country, in 1975.

The body of President Zia, 45, was flown Monday night back to Dacca, the capital, which is 130 miles (280 kilometers) from Chitta-gong, where be and more than half a dozen aides were slain Saturday morning. Thousands of people, many of them in tears, thronged

It was not immediately clear wbether anyone had been apprehended with him. A government spokesman in Dacca said Monday morning that four officers and 50 enlisted men had fled during the night, as their rebellion had

Gen. Manzur, a longtime rival of President Zia, who was also a career military man, had made several appeals for support from other army units during his abortive 48hour revolt. But reports reaching New Delhi through diplomatic and other channels said that the rebellion had found virtually no hacking among military units elsewhere in the country, and that there had been no lighting anywhere except

'Full Cooperation' Doubted

Lt Cooke's legal counsel, Capt. Francis W. Pedrotty, could oot be reached for comment at his home, although he said Saturday that his client had been "cooperating fully" with the investigation "under promise of complete immunity."

The investigators had offered immunity, one official said, in an effort 10 determine how far Lt. Cooke may have compromised the security of the Titan intercontinental ballistic missiles. But military officials said Sunday that the Air Force did not feel bound to the offer of immunity because investigators contend that Lt. Cooke has not been cooperating fully.

The course of American federalism - specifically, Washington's relations with the states - has been debated off and on since the adoption of the U.S. Constitution almost 200 years ago. Federalism was an issue in the Whiskey Rebelhon of 1794, in the Civil War and in the civil rights struggle of the 1960s. What is of note about the current debate is the scrutiny given 500 federal aid programs and the thousands of federal regulations

JOHANNESBURG — The editor of the Rand Daily Mail, the most vehement in criticizing the South African government, has been dismissed in what appears to be an effort to attract more white readers by lowering the paper's political profile.

A statement Sunday by South African Associated Newspapers, the group that owns the Mail, said there would be no shift in editorial policy. The statement did not explain the change in editors, but the main factor is believed to have been the steadily declining financial position of the Mail due to advertising losses. Last year was an especially bad year, with losses reportedly running to $5.3 million.

The dismissed editor. Allister Sparks, said he thought the change in editors was part of a strategy for reducing the losses, and that it would involve making the newspaper less aggressive on sensitive po-

Racial Shift

"It seems to me inevitable that the purpose of move is to lower the paper's voice and also to shift the emphasis more towards white readers and less towards black readers." he said.

Mr. Sparks. 48, will be replaced by Tertius Myburgh, editor of the Sunday Times, a profitable weekly newspaper owned by the same group. The management's state-ment said Mr. Myburgh, 46, would retain his editorship of the Sunday Times to enable the group to "ra-tionalize" the use of resources on the two papers.

Both newspapers supported the Progressive Federal Party, the relanively liberal official opposition, in April's all-white election when the party scored surprising gains in Johannesburg and other urban centers.

On South African newspapers, the editor is personally responsible for most editorials. Mr. Myburgh writes from an essentially liberal perspective, but be is generally held to be more restrained in his criticism of the governing National Party than Mr. Sparks has been.

Mr. Sparks' style tended to be confrontational. It was during his four years as editor that the Mail took the lead in a series of exposures of a secret fund in the information Ministry that ultimately decided the outcome of a light for leadership of the governing party and forced the resignation of John Vorster, a former prime minister, from the ceremonial position of Resentment of the Mail's role is widely believed to have been a major factor in causing the govern-ment to appoint a judicial commission to investigate the role of the press in South Africa. Prominent figures on Afrikaans-language newspapers have suggested that legislation to add to the government's arsenal of press controls might be avoided if the Mail could be made less of an irritant.

But it was the loss of advertising that apparently made Mr. Sparks vuloerable and this was caused by declining white readership. With a circulation of 110,000, the Mail is still Johannesburg's leading morning newspaper but readership surveys indicate that it now has more black readers than white.

The Crocker memorandum attacks the policy of former Presi-dent Jimmy Carter's administration, which had concentrated on obtaining independence for Namibia as a first step, as not tough enough on Angola, and the "Ango-la first" approach of some conservatives as bound to alienate black Africans over Namibia and give Moscow "a propaganda lield day."

Allies Skeptical

Britain, France, West Germany and Canada, which together with the United States form the "contact group" that has been working on the Namibia problem, are said to be skeptical of the new approach.

They would prefer to avoid the complications of trying to arrange a settlement in Angola and are said to believe that South Africa might simply try to use the new strategy to delay further a settlement in Namibia. But almost all of the officials and diplomats interviewed said that something new had to be tried.

The situation the new U.S. administration inherited was this: Three years ago. South Africa accepted a plan for Namibian independence, starting with an internationally monitored election for an assembly to draft a constitution. However, Pretoria has since refused to put it into effect. Meanwhile, a guerrilla movement known as the South-West Africa People's Organization, SWAPO, based in Angola, has continued to attack South African forces in Namibia. South African forces attacked the insurgents in Angola, and at the same time, gave aid to Mr. Savimhi's forces.

Preserving Leverage

In the Reagan team's view, the key problem was to find a way to South Africa to proceed with independence for Nanubia without losing whatever leverage the West had to get the 20,000 Cuban troops to leave Angola, It feared that if independence was granted to Namibia and South African troops left before the Cubans evacuated Angola, any such leverage would disappear.

'If. unlike the Carter administration," the memorandum reads, "we are prepared to address the major concerns," of South Africa, we can get an agreement." were defined as removing the Soviet and Cuban presence from Angola strong protections in the Nami-bian constitution for minority rights, and a clearly impartial body to supervise subsequent elections in Namibia.

In addition, the memorandum stated that South Africa and its white allies in Namibia need 12 to 18 months, they believe, to get into a better position to compete with SWAPO" and that South Africa "needs a formula that reduces SWAPO's advantages and saves

The Reagan administration has unprecedented credibility" in South Africa to obtain such an agreement, the memorandum said. To cement the relationship, the memorandum called for easing export restrictions, entering into a consular treaty, exchanging defense attaches, and "moving ahead on our stalled nuclear relations." This approach is consistent with State Department briefing papers for President Reagan's meeting with South Africa's foreign minister, R.F. Botha, on May 15, papers that were given to newspapers re-cently by an anti-South African

Two Murders

The IRA Provisionals claimed two murders Sunday, that of the police constable in Belfast's Royal Victoria Hospital and that of an army bomb disposal expert with a bobby-trapped car on a rural road near Newry.

In a message to Belfast newspa-pers, the IRA said it shot the poceman as a direct challenge to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. "This is not the last card, Mrs.

Thatcher," the message said.

Mrs. Thatcher said last week that the IRA could be playing its last card in its campaign against British rule through the hunger strikes of its members for political prisoner status in the Maze prison. Four hunger strikers have died and four other prisoners have taken their places.

Also killed Sunday was British Army Sgt. Major Michael O'Neill.

Witnesses in the Royal Victoria Hospital said that two men and a woman approached the constable Colin Dunlop, 30, who was stand-ing at the door of the intensive care unit and opened fire at pointblank range, hitting him a number of times. They fled through the nergency ward.

Mr. Dunlop, who was guarding a man wanted for questioning, was the sixth person to be killed in hospitals. The others were IRA sympathizer Maire Drumm, an offduty policeman waiting on his mother and sister, a solider waiting on a friend, an ambulance controller and a man recovering from an earlier attempt to kill him.

Iranian Commission Delivers Warning To President Bani-Sadr on Constitution

TEHRAN - President Abolhas- point new heads of vacant ministsan Bani-Sadr was officially warned by a three-man reconciliation commission Monday that he had violated the constitution and the orders of Iran's revolutionary leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. The commission also eleared the president's opponents of any wrongdoing.

The main aim of the commission set up by Ayatollah Khomeini was settle the feud between Mr. Bani-Sadr and Iran's clergy-dominated government. The commis-sion reports its findings to Iran's prosecutor-general, but made no recommendation that legal action be taken against the president.

The three-man panel - composed of clergymen representing Ayatollah Khomeini, the president and his opponents in the fundamentalist Islamie Republican Party — was proposed by the ayatol-lah last March in a 10-point statement that also muzzled the country's warring politicians.

The commission said the president not only broke the 10-point statement but also refused to sign a bill approved by parliament that eries. It also accused the president's newspaper, Islamic Revolution, and the liberal daily Mizan of having violated the law and asked the prosecutor-general to take steps against these and several other publications.

Morale of Armed Forces

The commission said that, lollowing Ayatollah Khomeini's orders, issues should be tackled in such a way as to avoid creating tension, causing public anxiety and confrontations, which would "inevitably lead to the weakening of the morale of Iran's armed forces fighting against Iraq."

Mr. Bani-Sadr has been involved in a struggle with the clergy-backed government of Premier Mohammed Ali Rajai. The president has frequently accused the government of overstepping its rights and curtailing his authority, while Mr. Rajai says the president is undermining his running of the country. In a speech to air force personnel last week, Mr. Bani-Sadr said he will continue his struggle for

Europeans Welcome Burns in Bonn Post

By Hobart Rowen

ZURICH - President Reagan's appointment of the former chairman of the Federal Reserve Board Arthur F. Burns, as ambassador to West Germany is widely hailed in Europe, although there is a bit of wonderment whether a man of 77 can keep up with the pace. Nonetheless, it has greatly pleased Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and others in West Germany who regard Mr. Burns as one of the truly distinguished Americans.

Bank of Switzerland, and probably the most powerful man in the country, "whenever we had a problem, we would get Karl Klasen to

For the last 30 years, in one capacity or other, Mr. Burns has been a symbol in Europe of Ameri-can fiscal integrity. When he met in Basel at the regular "elub" of influential central bankers, Mr. Leutwiler, Mr. Klasen, Otmar Emminger and others knew that by and large, Mr. Burns had the Federal Reserve under tight con-

The venerable economist may be starting his diplomatic career at just the right time, when West Germany and the United States have been in danger of drifting apart over the correct strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union, Mr. Burns' special talent in this situation is his keen understanding of the German philosophy and his close relationship to Mr. Schmidt.

But economic issues are also an increasingly crucial ingredient of foreign policy, and here Mr. Burns is well equipped to explain Mr. Reagan's program not only in West Germany, but elsewhere in Europe as well. He is sympathetic to Mr. Schmidt's explaint that to Mr. Schmidt's complaint that West German inflation is in large part the legacy of the Carter ad-ministration's demand at the 1977 economic summit meeting in Bonn that West Germany act as a "locomotive" for economic growth in

Mr. Burns also strongly agrees with Mr. Schmidt's ass that if the world seeks to solve the problems created by the Organiza-tion of Petroleum Exporting Countries by resorting to protectionist methods, it can sink into what Mr. Schmidt describes in the current issue of Foreign Affairs as "a world economie crisis of unknown di-

For Asking to Emigrate to Israel

MOSCOW - Alla loshpe was a Jewish girl from Moscow. Stakhan Rakhimov was a Moslem boy from Uzbekistan. They met in the finals of a nationwide student singing competition, shared the first prize, fell in love, were married and he-

Now, Alla and Stakhan sing
only for friends in their Moscow apartment — banned from Soviet stages, their foreign tours canceled, their records removed from the store shelves, their videotapes erased, their voices no longer heard on the radio. An eucyclopedia on the arts was held up so an entry about them could be ex-

The reason is that two years ago they applied to emigrate to Israel. Rehukes came from Uzbekistan, where Mr. Rakhimov was a na-tional idol. While his marriage to a Jew had seemed a bit eccentric to many of his fellow Uzbeks, it had

"I entreated them to let her finish her course while we waited for our visas, but they wouldn't," Miss Ioshpe said. "With all this pres-sure, she had a nervous hreakdown and spent a month in a hospital."

Last Nov. 14, their visa applica-tion was refused. Miss Ioshpe's parents, who had applied at the same time, were granted permission to leave, hut, being old and in poor health, they were afraid to go alone and did not want to break up the family.

Since then, according to the couple, there have been hints that Miss Ioshpe and her daughter could be cleared for emigration if they left without her husband.

Dangerous Vacuum in Dacca

For the last five years it has been the conventional wisdom that Gen. Ziaur Rahman was the sole guarantor of stability and the prime force for economic and political progress in Bangladesh, the world's second poorest country. Now Gen. Zia is dead, the victim of a failed coup attempt whose motives are still ohscure. It may be that the most significant tribute to his tenure as benevolent dictator to 90 million Bangladeshis was the failure of the coup. Most of the army remained loyal to the government and there was no popular uprising in support of his bloody overthrow.

Although Gen. Zia was widely regarded as a good, intelligent, honest man who was holding his own against extraordinary odds in managing the national and foreign affairs of his desperately poor country, there were no assurances that he had institutionalized his rule. There is no guarantee of that yet, of course, but the fact that the army railied to support the government is encouraging.

It should also be remembered that Gen. Zia was the beneficiary of a coup in which Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, the founding father of Bangladesh, and many members of his family were slaughtered: that corruption flourished under his rule despite the fact that he was personally irreproachable, and that even though good weather during his years as president prevented a disaster in Bangladesh's agricultural economy, grinding poverty remained the most prominent characteristic of the country.

There's no telling what the future holds. The return from India of Hasina Wazed, Sheik Muiih's daughter, to head her father's Awami League Party, complicates the political scene, especially now that Gen. Zia is

According to press reports, Mrs. Wazed has been arrested. But if she is allowed to stay and participate in politics, relations with India could become the critical factor in determining the outcome of a post-Zia power struggle, if there is one. The general who staged the coup was said to have heen anti-Indian; there is a dispute between the two countries over an island in the estuary that forms part of their border, and there is substantial anti-Indian sentiment among the fundamentalist Moslems of Bangladesh.

Unless a forceful leader emerges in Dacca quickly, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, a good friend of Sheikh Mujih and the protector of his daughter, could easily be tempted to mix in her neighbor's affairs. We don't know whether a return to Awami League rule would be better for Bangladesh than continued rule by Gen. Zia's Bangladesh Nationalist Party, but we have no douht that the choice should be made by Bangla-

Inflation and the Tax Bill

When President Reagan signs that tax cut later this year, how much will the average American increase his or her savings in response to it? The administration argues vigorously - that the average taxpayer will save more of his or her income — and this assertion is central to its whole tax strategy. The future savings rate is crucial to the president's claim that his tax cut - despite the large budget deficit that would continue next year - can encourage investment without increasing inflation. In our own view, the president is mistaken. With the negotiations between the White House and Congress now apparently approaching a climax, the underlying issues of savings and investment require careful attention.

Saving equals investment, the textbook says. But the term "savings" is not quite so simple as it looks. The money that you put in the teapot is certainly savings. The profits that corporations reinvest are also savings. A country's net imports, oddly, count as savings. And most emphatically, a government budget surplus - if there were one - would be savings. The present U.S. deficit is negative savings.

The point here is that increasing any category of savings is the same as increasing any other, in its effect on investment and the financial markets. Specifically, an increase of $1 in personal savings has the same effect for investment as a decrease of $1 in the federal deficit.

Americans currently save about 5 percent of their after-tax income. A rise of only one percentage point next year would mean an additional $23 billion in personal savings -with the same meaning for the nervous financial markets and investors as reducing the federal deficit almost by half. The Resgan administration is telling the business and financial crowd not to get obsessed with the federal deficit because, even though the tax cut will keep it high, relief is coming from another direction.

That's why it is essential for the administration to show that a tax cut will actually increase personal savings. Donald T. Regan, secretary of the Treasury, returned to this argument again Sunday when he appeared in a television discussion.

Is the argument persuasive? It's quite true that the famous 1964 tax cut increased the rate of saving. The country was in the third year of a tremendous boom that was rapidly raising incomes. Inflation was low and the tax cut was, as economists say, real; even after inflation, tax rates were sharply lower. But at the inflation rates that the administration itself foresees, the Reagan tax bill would offer substantial real cuts only to a small minority of wealthy taxpayers. For everyone else, it would provide very little change. Inflation would keep pushing them up into higher tax brackets nearly as fast as the tax cuts reduced the rates for each bracket.

If there is little real tax cut for the vast majority of people, savings rates won't rise. If savings don't rise, there's nothing to offset the financial pressure of continuing budget er demand, with the usual acceleration of inflation. The famous 1964 tax cut, incidentally, not only increased savings. It also pushed up interest rates - and inflation as well.

The Clear Winner

Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, who was buried in Warsaw on Sunday, became leader of the Roman Catholic Church in Poland as the Soviet Army was forcing Communist rule on the country after World War II. Like most of his countrymen, the primate regarded the new civil order as fundamentally alien to Polish tastes and traditions and as something imposed by a historic enemy. At the same time, he accepted a responsibility to work within the framework of the new geopolitical reality in order to tend to the spiritual needs of the faithful, which means just about everyone in Poland, and to sustain the special role of the church as the custodian of the Polish national spirit. This made him for 32 years the central figure in his church's and people's struggle with the regime. He was the clear winner.

Cardinal Wyszynski started this struggle with the conviction that Communism was not only alien hut transient, a burden that God had imposed on Poland but one that would pass. This confidence flowed from his spirituality and from his sense of Polish history alike. It meant be would fight for his church and country, but it also meant he could afford to parley with the Communist authorities and accommodate their secular requirements, secure in the knowledge that time was working against the system. In a final bow of tribute, the government declared national mourning when Cardinal Wyszynski died last Thursday, saying that he had created "a pattern of cooperation between the Catholic Church and the Socialist state," which the authorities intend to continue.

The cardinal's contribution to the peaceful revolution now taking place in Poland was overwhelming. More than any other single figure, he had nourished the national moral base - the sense that even in Socialist Poland power must be wielded justly - on which the workers' movement has made its claims. At specific turning points, he has had the judgment and authority to keep those claims within politically feasible bounds, and thus to protect the revolution against its own

His loss is a grievous one for his country. But he leaves, too, in the institution of his church, a sturdy instrument to continue his work. That one of his proteges is the pope this pope - is another part of his enormous

WASHINGTON - The federal capital is shocked by the news that Mr. Robert Adams, Republican representative from Pennsylvania for 12 years, shot himself with suicidal intent this morning at his apartments in the Metropolitan Club. He died five hours later. It is stated that his mind had become unbalanced by the loss of most of his fortune owing to injudicious investment. Mr. Adams, 47, who was a hachelor, had recently become subjected to considerable banter by his introduction of a bill into Congress in favor of establishing a whipping-post for wife-beaters in the District of Columbia. The bill was rejected by an overwhelming majority, though President Rooseveli was in favor of it.

Next Wednesday Chancellor Bruening and Foreign Minister Julius Curtius meet with Britain's Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald to thrash out the bearing of reparations upon the world economic crisis. A trial balloon thrown out by the London Daily Herald that Germany should be granted an international loan of 2,000 million marks to belo her out of her financial difficulties finds no favorable response in Berlin. It would make Britain and France creditors of Germany, bringing reparations back into politics.

Help Wanted: Someone to Write That Stuff

By William Safire

Wanted, presidential speechwriter. Surong-willed enough to resolve foreign-policy differences of European-Schmidten Haigsmen and Helms-wary Reaganites, skilled enough to impose cohesion of thought while retaining the relaxed Reagan style. Passion for anonymity required. Low pay, little prestige, but big payoff on

Last week. President Reagan gave a mishmash of a commencement address to the West Point cadets. He served a themeless pudding on a platter of platitudes, calling for spiritual revival and promising higher pay; he de-nounced "shrill voices" in a determinedly unshrill voice, and proved to every doubter that the White House library contains a book of quotations.

Mr. Reagan's amiable ramble down Flirtation Walk at the military academy fullowed a sentimental journey to Notre Dame, where his commencement address was modeled after, but did not measure up to, a Knute Rockne locker-room pep talk. In each case, the president spoke to the au-dience in front of him and ignored the multi-tudes behind him. Those who have been waiting for a major foreign policy address now hunger for a minor foreign policy address. The rest of the world has reason to wonder if Mr. Reagan and his aides have a unified, principled approach to foreign affairs, or if a guru named Pragma and his followers will conduct foreign policy day to day.

Three Writers Refused

To the question "Who is writing this stuff?" the White House staff resolutely maintains "the president is writing it himself." That is the height of in-house disloyalty; at least they should assign someone other than Mr. Reagan to be scapegoat.

Three fine writers have already refused the job of chief speechwriter. Peter Hannaford, who wrote Mr. Reagan's stirring and meaty acceptance address at the convention in Detroit last summer, prefers to build a public relations firm; Ken Khachegian, who worked on the inaugural likes the California life; and Bill Gavin, who did excellent campaign writing, has returned to Capitol Hill, persuaded that a writer long associated with and trusted by Mr. Reagan (such as Mr. Hannaford) is needed for that job.

That leaves Anthony Dolan, author of the election-eve television speech, who would like to be chief speechwriter but who does not yet have the clout to knock heads together in the articulation of policy. David Gergen, trained in speechwriting during the Nixon-Ford years, now has that needed clout, but prefers to be the chief of staff's chief of staff. (And I'm not answering the above ad, either.)

Result: Nobody is in charge. Speeches are determined by the president's schedule, rather than the other way round, and are so unimportant that they are left to the president to fiddle with in his spare time.

Infusing Weltanschauung

What a far cry from the days of the Sherwood and Rosenman, Sorensen and Schlesinger, Price and Buchanan. Their bosses realized the "major address" was not only a means of leading but an irreplaceable tool in decision

Suppose Mr. Reagan wanted to articulate his approach to world affairs and to explain the danger of Communism in its final threes. Suppose he wanted to put into context his position in the Mideast, to show our European allies and Japan what they must do to earn the nuclear umbrella, and to set straight U.S. priorities in the struggle for human rights. Suppose be wanted to infuse this Weltanschauung with an understanding of international economic imperatives.

He would send for his chief speechwriter and give him the broad outline of his thinking. He would send the writer to the secretaries of state and defense and to the national security adviser for a refinement of that thinking and for drafts of speech sections.

Word would flash through the administration that the president's philosophical base was up for grabs. Against a deadline, the disa-greements that are now being papered over yould quickly be laid bare. Battles would take place over themes and priorities, over specific lines and phrases, all within the family and in the drafts being sent to the president by the person charged with pulling together the expli-cation of his policy.

Whose Views Prevail?

The president would then decide which lines to choose, which courses to take, which additions to write in personally, and which disa-greements to continue to paper over. His ad-visers would learn whose views are prevailing at this time, and the president would discover not only what creative tensions exist among his policymakers but what decisions be must make now and will have to make later.

The central point about the agonizing, timeconsuming preparation of a major foreign policy speech is that the president think it through self, stand corrected by his associates when his thinking is wrong, and in the end impose his policy upon his administration. He should not delegate it, as Jerry Ford did, or patch it together from conflicting drafts, as Jimmy Carter did or go on winging it, as Ronald Reagan has been doing. If be expects to be the Great Communicator, this president will have to overcome the mptation to perform for the faces before him. The real audience is the nation and the world, which will not be wowed by the music but can be persuaded by the words.

A Response: Bribery and U.S. Trade

Vice's Pious Homage to Virtue

By Philip B. Heymann

(discussed on this page in a May 29 article by U.S. trade representa tive Bill Brock) prohibits U.S. business from bribing officials of foreign governments. It is an extraordinary member of the family of post-Watergate laws. On the one hand, its existence is hardly surprising. Practically no politician or businessman will openly defend bribery of officials, even abroad. But on the other hand, it reaches only American businessmen, leaving their foreign competitors to the advantages of corruption at U.S. expense.

No one really knows how preva-lent or necessary bribery is in various countries, because it is carried out secretly everywhere. What it costs the United States in exports can only be a guess, although it must have real costs. No one really knows whether U.S. efforts to re-duce corruption are effective in. and appreciated by. Third World countries. But the response of Egypt, Mexico, Algeria and a dozen other countries suggests there are real benefits.

Against this background, one

But there is a conviction that the regime (now 63 years old) is transient as well as illegitimate, that its economic, imperial and ethnic frailties are such that a policy of strength and en-durance will pay off in a reason-able time, and that a change of regime or even a change of heart will produce a suitable partner for the United States.

I think Mr. Reagan is being tough to a fault. He is mortgaging his policy to a single, extreme, arbitrary and historically unproven concept of Soviet power. By so doing, he risks continued strains with friends and allies, whose politics and psyches are geared not for a Reagan-type all-or-nothing roll of the international dice but for nursing their chips and staying in the game for the long haul.

Mr. Reagan cannot expect to profit indefinitely from the stillpervasive sense that be is correcting, necessarily, for his predecessors errors. As time goes on, Americans are bound to become more sensitive to the hudgetary and political implications of his policy. The relative consensus prevailing now may cloud. Quemoy Bristles With Rhetoric As It Maintains Footing for War

By Henry Kamm New York Times Service

OUEMOY - The first thing to strike a visitor's eye as he alights from the military plane are two huge signs that proclaim in bold winte Chinese characters on a flaming red background "Recover the Chinese Mainland" and "Destroy the Communists."

Military transport remains the only way of reaching Quemoy and its sister island of Matsu, because the offshore islands remain fully military areas and are customarily referred to by nationalist officers as "the battlefront"

The last exchanges of gunfire took place 23 years ago, and the Communist gunners stopped their every-other-day barrages of shells loaded with propaganda leaflets in December, 1978, a few days before the United States broke diplomatic relations with Taiwan.

Propaganda Shelling

The Nationalist side, however, maintains its propaganda shelling of the coast of Finian (formerly Fukien) province. Both sides continue to send aloft balloons that

War Footing

Quemoy, despite its 52,000 inhabitants living in five towns and 35 villages, remains on a full war footing. The number of troops stationed on the island is secret, but they are everywhere. They guard every crossroads, they are huddled into camouflaged pillboxes, they swarm through the extensive net-work of tunnels and trenches.

Sometimes they are seen patroling in a field exercise; often they can be observed in such maketinue to send aloft balloons that work projects as sweeping dried carry either propaganda wrapped pine needles off the roadways with around cookies, soap or items of fresh branches cut from the same clothing, or propaganda stuffed into inflated plastic toys.

Moreover, both sides still fill the pline and combat enthusiasm appline and combat enthusiasm ap-pear high, although none of the young soldiers bas had to test their fighting mettle.

The language of the military and the signs that are everywhere are studded with the phraseology of the period when the United States appeared ready to go to war over Quemoy and Matsu if the Communists attacked.

However, by the time of the mu-tual defense treaty, signed in 1954 and unilaterally abrogated by the United States in 1979, Washington had already excluded the islands from the treaty's applicability.

'Sentry and Safeguard'

"We are the sentry and the safeguard of Taiwan and the Pesca-dores," said a young woman of the "self-defense corps," who, armed with a pointer and standing at attention, briefed a visitor.

"So that we never forget that we are not at peace but at war," replied Col. Mao Dien-ping of the military spokesman's office when asked about the officially fostered belligerent air. "The enemy can destroy our lives at any moment. We should work hard to fight against

Hanoi Attacks Graft,

The Associated Press

HANOI - Six months after initiating liberal economic reforms, the Communist government has launched drives against bureau-cratic graft and "depraved" cul-

Some Western diplomats say that the campaigns, which reflect a debate in the Vietnamese hierarchy on the limits of economic and personal freedom, may be the beginning of a harsher drive to ensure party control of this country of 46 million.

The economic reforms gave lo-cal production managers greater freedom from government control but also created new opportunities for graft, Western diplomats said.

Halting Embezzlement

The diplomats observe that in-flation has also encouraged graft. The salaries of managers at staterun enterprises have risen only 20 percent in the last six months, while food prices have gone up almosi 40 percent.

The party newspaper. Nhan Dan, kicked off the campaign against corruption on May 12 with an article beadlined "Let Us Stop Collective Embezzlement." It said workers at state-run enterprises and cooperatives in 15 provincinal districts had stolen 300 million dong worth of goods in the third quarter of last year — $121 million at the official exchange rate, but $10 million on the free market.

Nhan Dan said several enterprises refused to raise their prices as ordered by the government and continued to sell goods to their employees at outdated prices. The merchandise included bicycle chains, wool, cloth, sugar and electric fans. Subsequent articles bave listed officials sentenced to between one and 15 years for corrupt said that a "hostile" U.S. attitude has "seriously impeded" cooperation in the search for American servicemen missing in action from the Vietnam War.

The broadcast, monitored in Bangkok on Sunday, said Vict-namese officials informed an American delegation during talks in Hanoi last week that political conflicts were creating problems between the two countries on the issue of Americans who are still unaccounted for.

The U.S. delegation, which left the Vietnamese capital Saturday, was told that the remains of three American servicemen missing in action since the war would be returned to the United States, Sunday's broadcası said the remains would be sent back after identificarions were completed.

Radio Hanoi quoted Vu Hoang, head of the Vietnamese search effort, as saying delays were caused by "U.S. collusion with the Peking expanionists," apparently referring to what he called U.S. approval of China's one-month invasion of Vietnam in the spring of 1979.

The daily paper Milliyet said in its weekend edition that Turkish security forces first captured the militants, and then gradually the leading members, of the 28 armed groups fighting to establish Marx-ist rule in the country.

Following the military seizure of power, police and military task forces launched a nationwide antiterrorism drive that netted an estimated 30,000 suspected members of extreme rightist and leftist organizations.

Milliyet reported most of the leftist terror bands were active in urban centers and some of them refrained from terrorist acts following the coup by Gen. Kenan Evren, chief of staff.

Grand Duchess Crespin After 30 Years in Opera

By Gladys Bourdain International Herald Tribune

Personalities

PARIS — Regine Crespin paced at the rear of the Salle Gaveau as, one after the other, the students of the Conservatoire National Superieur de Musique's vocal depart-ment went oustage to sing the ohligatory two arias and one song in competition.

The soprano sat, stood up, sat, went to the ladies' room, returned, terribly nervous because three of her women students were among the 18 competing for the prizes that would affect their future at the school.

"I suffer more for them than before one of my own performances," Crespin said with a groan as she waited for her "children" to

At the end of the second day, there was an hour's wait for the jury of seven to make its choices, and Crespin fretted over a pot of tea at a nearby cafe. Finally, the results: top prize for women to one of Crespin's students and a second prize to each of the other two. "Think how lucky we are," she said to a fellow singer-teacher. "To bave a career like this and to be able to pass on what we spent 25 years learning." To the others she said, "I'm so happy I started teaching while I still sing, because I have learned a lot from trying to explain things to my students."

Not a Stereotype

Crespin is at once a confirmation and con-tradiction of the stories one hears about opera stars. She does live well, has several furs, usually keeps a bottle or two of champagne to her refrigerator ("It's the least-fattening alcohol and the best drink"), has masses of fresh flowers in her living room and avoids

But the French diva also likes to dance at discotheques, enjoys a game of poker, smokes more than her friends think she should ("I don't inhale," she swears), and has a large repertoire of raunchy jokes, which she tells with great style.

Crespin reads constantly - biographies, psychoanalytic case histories, science fiction;
—she can recite from memory long passages from the works of Marcel Pagnol in the tual native Provencal accent - is a dedicated film buff and enjoys playing games, which, if deduction or reasoning is involved, she usual-

On Sunday, she began a week of performances in Offenbach's "La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein" at the Theatre Musical de Paris. For musical comedy stars with body microphones, six performances a week might be easy. It's almost unheard of for an opera "People believe operetta is easier to sing than opera, but in fact it is not," Crespin said, "Grande Duchesse' has four big arias, and the first one is like an opera aria. The you have to act also, just as in opera, and besides that you have to talk. It is not so

Later to June, "I go to Marseilles for a concert with orchestra on the 17th, then I have a recital to Saint-Maximin, a small town near Marseilles, then I do 'Carmen' in the arena of Nimes — my town — where I haven't sung io something like 20 years."

The "Carmen" rehearsals will start with a bit of work in Paris, continue for one day in Nantes, where the orchestra leader has an engagement, and wind up in Nimes. This is easy compared to two years ago," Crespin said. "I sang several performances of 'Grande Duchesse' in Toulouse during three weeks in April and May, and during the senes I had to sing the First Prioress in [Poulenc's] 'Dialogues of the Carmelines' with the Metropolitan Opera tour. I sang to Cleve-land oo a Saturday, to Toulouse on Tuesday and Wednesday, and the next Saturday sang the Prioress in Boston. Since we all were playing nuns in 'Dialogues' my colleagues named me 'Our Lady of the Concorde.'" The Poulenc opera was Crespin's first role to English, and although she was the only foreigner in an otherwise American cast. most reviewers remarked that she was the only one who could be understood.

"I worked hard on that part," she said. "At first I thought my French accent would go away when I sang. Then I started rehearing. and I found oot — agh! It was really difficult to say 'it is' and not 'eet ees.' And when 'th' was followed by an 's' I was really lost. I don't know how many days it took me to say

"Tve always been careful with diction be-cause I remember going to the opera as a young girl when everything in France was sung in French, and yet I couldn't understand what the singers were saying. This stuck in my head — to be understood as much as you can."

Anniversary in Opera

This year Crespin is celebrating her 30th anniversary in opera, and a three-disc retrospective album has been released. Fans have written to her asking angrily why the Paris Opera doesn't arrange a gala evening for her, but she shrugs it off. What does bother her is that Jacques

Chancel — whose long television programs are devoted to celebrities in a kind of "This is are devoted to celebrities in a kind of "Inis is Your Life" tribute — was to do a show about her and then didn't. "I'm very upset about that," she said. "Without making any comparison — and even if I like him — if they fete the 10 years of Enrico Macias on stage, they can do the 30 years of Regine Crespin.

don't you think so?" Some people recognize that Crespin has brought honor to ber country on stages throughout the operatic world and even aboard ship to the Mediterranean. She has been promoted to officer to the French Legion of Honor. The government hopes to subsidize some concert tours — Egypt and China are being mentioned. A large publish-ing house has asked her to write a book about her life and career, But uppermost to her mind the other day was the hope that she will have a little free time in October so she can manage an evening at the Olympia music hall to hear Yves Montand.

mosphere. "Our mission is to get people interested in the sky the way Jacques Cousteau got people interested in the water," Mr. Borden said at his For Spacious Skies conference, respect boundaries," said Mr.

sponsored in part by the National

While Mr. Borden's conference included paintings and photographs of the heavens, participants mostly heard reasons why ordinary people don't notice the sky anymore. A variety of philosophers and scientists said people fear the sky; they have forgotten it or they can no longer see it.

Smoke Fills Park

More troubling for some was a report by Dr. Richard Briceland, associate director for science and technology at the National Park Service, that the skies above the nation's parks are threatened by external air pollution, "Air pollu-tion, like water pollution, does not

Briceland. He showed a series of slides from Arches National Park near Moab, Utah, taken between 7:45 and 9:45 one morning. The park's vista slowly filled with smoke, which Mr. Briceland said came from a uranium mill near the

Richard Ayres, chairman of a coalition of environmentalists fighting revisions of the Clean Air Act, said that such vistas now are ioadequately protected. The present law says that if a vista is considered protected, the states tovolved must decide whether facilities outside the park should be allowed to send their air pollution over the park boundaries. "We think that law is clearly illegal," countered Jack Taylor, environmental program manager of electric utilities at Edison Electric Institute. "Property rights go from the ground up; they do not run horizontally."

If the Clean Air Act was one of the most urgent concerns for parti-cipants of the For Spacious Skies conference, others like Charles Roth, director of education for the Massachusetts Audubon Society, tried to explain why people seldom notice the sky above them.

"We may unconsciously try to ignore the sky because it tends to humble us," Mr. Roth said. As Mr. Borden says, "Some people will say, 'Yeah, I see the sky; there are a couple of clouds and there's some blue. So what? The same people probably think Bo Derek is just flesh, bone and a hank of hair."

Teaching Acting

John Strasberg's First Aid for Striving Performers

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss International Herald Tribune

PARIS - John Strasberg, actor, director and teacher, is touring Europe to give two-week crash courses on the development of acting technique.

Gentle-mannered but assured, he resembles a university undergraduate, with a boyish appearance that belies his 40 years. His father is Lee Strasberg, the re-nowned pedagogue of the Actor's Studio whose pupils have included Marion Brando, Marilyn Monroe, Julie Harris, Jo Van Fleet, Karl Malden, Al Pacino, Robert De Niro, Meryl Streep and James

As these and others have had conspicuous success, especially in films, novice thespians from Europe as well as the United States are anxious to sign up for the magic courses at the Actors' Studio, believing that the master of "The Method," as Lee Strasberg has been termed, can bestow the key to fame and fortune. John Strasberg studied under his father and served as his assistant on a production of Chekhov's

"The Three Sisters" in London and New York. He has profited by the experience and agrees with his father's teaching principles, but his application of The Method is less complex. The senior Strasberg's training is of almost psychoanalytical tovestigation and profundity, while the the son's approach might be likened to immediate first-aid for striving performers.

John Strasberg

The histrionic arge is in every-one — from the child that wants attention to electioneering politi-cians. It is to public figures and it is to private life," said John Strasberg. "It is raw stuff that, in acting, must be refined. Basically, it is the instinct of 'showing off' — that is common enough — but it must be lent purpose. A critic once wrote that only God can make a Beerbohm-Tree, making the point that some are born with talent and some are not. I wouldn't quarrel with that and, believe me, I've seen hopciess cases. Still, even the actor of genius natural gift. Let us be polite and not mention names, but some great actors have been known to loaf after 'arriving,' repeating a set style, whatever the role, until audiences can anticipate every move, every gesture, every reading. They simply do the same number over and over again and it becomes obvious and stale. They don't grow. They don't bother. They live on a well-known name and past success.

"Many established stars know better, in particular those who have much film work, for the majority of film producers want to sell the same thing again and again. In Hollywood, typecasting prevails and is practically the law. It deadens the actor. The wiser stars know they must keep in trim, as athletes must, and they come to the studio for exercise as athletes work out in the gym. They may try scenes in plays or films they are scheduled to do or they may want to experiment with scenes that are not related to their next vehicles.

They want to expand their range."
For 10 years John Strasberg was general director of the Lee Strasberg Institute, which has quarters m New York and Hollywood, and now he has his own program for professional acting training, which he calls "The Real Stage." Aside from interpretation or orals, its agenda embraces vocal training corporal discipline and expression, and is followed with a course in mime, lencing, kung fu, acrobatics, judo and karate.

Four years ago Jose-Luis Gomez of the National Theater of Madrid invited John Strasberg to be guest professor for his company. Stras-berg knew little Spanish, but this was not regarded as essential and be worked through interpretors and to his host's satisfaction.

In his classes in Paris, "I have 25 pupils, most of them professional players, and IO spectators are allowed to attend. The students who participate select their own material: a great deal of Chekhov, some Shakespeare and, I notice, scenes from plays by the younger German dramatists.

"Here is an example of the working pattern. This morning a young couple did a hit of 'Mac-beth,' Act I, Scene 7, in which Lady Macbeth comes to find why Macbeth has left the banquet table as he meditates on the murder of Duncan.

"She entered and began to berate him from across the performing space as though she were delivering a lecture, a very theatrical one. That wouldn't do. She is speaking to him in burried conference. They must be close. Then as they bicker and he is rejuctant to commit the murder she grows increasingly ferocious. I suggested that she slap his face to emphasize her insistence and to spur him to

"Perhaps to directing a film 1 wouldn't have told him what she was going to do and he would be taken by surprise, but that type of trickery that sometimes is effective on the screen is not for the theater. On the stage, harmony in acting is necessary to sustain a play, while a film is a collection of scenes." Strasberg, though following in his father's footsteps, does not have the time on this European jaint to impose his program of training in its entirety. What he is doing with a series of two-week sessions is to demonstrate to actors the possibilities of their full development and the potentials of their demanding art.

After Paris, his schedule took him to Spain, Italy and West Germany. On his travels he is competing his first play, which is to be produced on Broadway next season. He said that he has no title in mind as yet, but that the play is a drama in a modern setting.

Opera in Glyndebourne

Small Is Beautiful for Rossini 'Barber'

By Henry Pleasants ional Herald Tribune

CLYNDEBOURNE, England — Attending "The Barber of Seville," the first new production of this season's annual Glyndebourne Opera Festival, was to be reminded of how much this buffa masterpiece gains from performance to a small house in an action a small content of the content o intimate environment, especially when so well sung, so well acted and so well played.

This is a characteristic Glyndebourne production, with mostly young, not yet famous singers, carefully rehearsed by John Cox, the festival's longtime director of production, and with Sylvain Cambreling re-cently appointed principal conductor of the Theatre Royal de la Monnaie in Brussels, making a Glynde-bourne debut, and imaginatively designed by William

A characteristic touch, too, that the title role should be sung hy John Rawnsley, whose operatic career began six years ago when he joined the Glyndebourne chorus, and who has worked his way up since then in secondary roles, and in principal roles with the Glyndebourne touring company. This was his first Figaro, and he played and sang it with enormous gusto and humor, earning the ovation of the evening with a "Largo al lactotum" replete with high G's and even high A's that many a tenor might envy. Glyndebourne has been a launching pad for a number of important singers, and Rawnsley may well follow in their trajectory.

The Rosina is (through June 20) the American mezzo soprano Maria Ewing, who has already made a name for herself on the continent as Cherubino, most notably in Salzburg in 1976 and again last year. This is her first Rosina, and certainly not her last, fluently and accurately sung and nicely acted, a certain lingering gancherie rather adding to an endearing characterization. She will be replaced beginning June 22 by the Israeli mezzo Zehava Gal.

A good deal has been made here of the fact that having Rosina sung by a mezzo rather than a soprano gives it the kind of voice that Rossini had in mind, and it was, indeed, a pleasure to hear the aria he wrote for the lesson scene rather than the conventional interpolation, especially when so well sung.

But Ewing's is not really that kind of true contralto, lacking the rich, baritonal lower register now so sadly out of fashion. Like most mezzos today, she has more at the upper end of the range than the lower, and it would not be surprising to see her follow the example of her American mezzo sisters, Grace Bum-bry and Shirley Verrett, in moving upward into the soprano category.

High-Voiced Bartolo

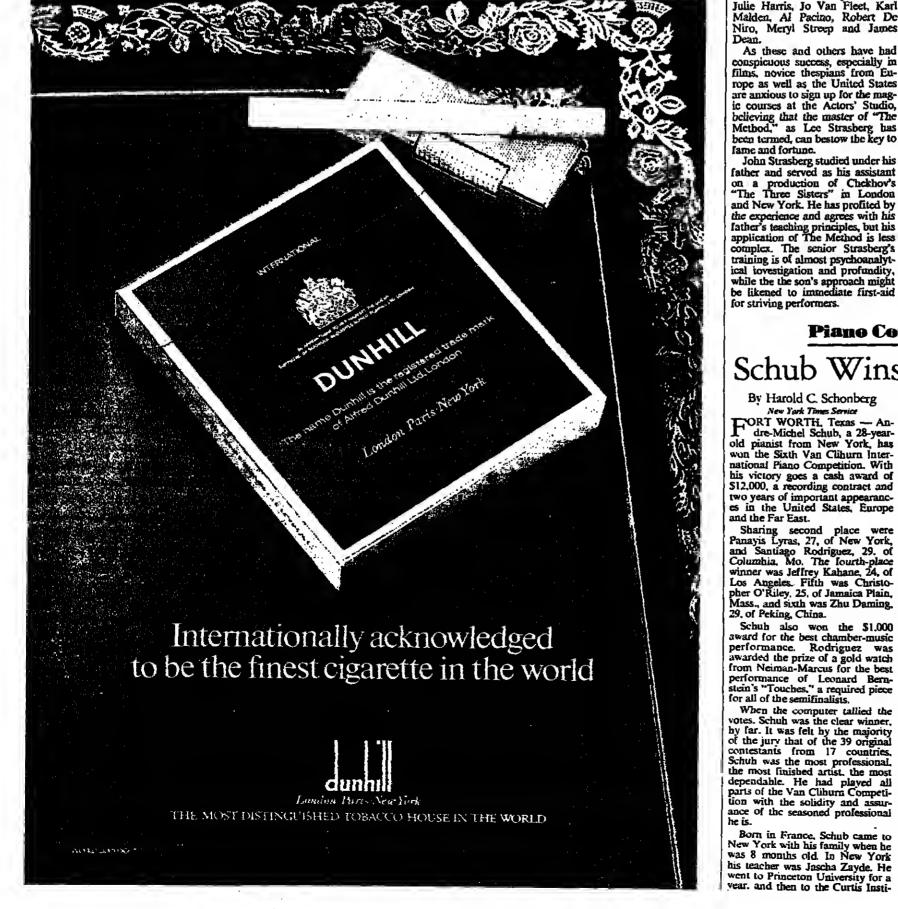

The buffo roles are in the fine Italian hands of The buffe roles are in the fine Italian hands of Claudio Desderi as Bartolo and Feruccio Furlanetto, and here it would seem that the producer may have erred in casting Bartolo with a high baritone rather than a basso buffe, and in making him young enough and vigorous enough to leave one wondering at Rosina's pejorative references to him in her discourse with Almaviva. No traditional dodering ogre he, and the production suffers accordingly.

production suffers accordingly.

Almaviva is sung with much style, esepcially in mezza voce and head voice, and with much charming verve by another Italian, Max-Rene Cosotti, a familiary and the style in the style iar and justly admired figure at Glyndebourne.

The season continues through Aug. 11, with a new production of Britten's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (from Jone 21) and revivals of earlier productions of "The Marriage of Figure " MELA " ductions of "The Marriage of Figure," "Fidelio" and "Ariadne auf Naxos."

BUSINESS NEWS BRIEFS

Toyota Motor Announces Record Share Offer TOKYO - Toyota Motor said Monday it will soon offer 70 million new shares through public subscription to raise its capital to 91.5 billion yen ($410 million) from the present 88 billion. Payment will be required on July 31 at a price yet to be established. Toyota shares were quoted Monday up 30 yen at 1,130. The public offering would thus raise about 70 billion yen at the present price — the largest sum ever raised by a Japanese manufacturer. The record is 50 billion yen raised by Matsushita Electric in an offering last November.

The proceeds will help finance capital outlays totaling 280 billion yen in fiscal 1981, the company said it expects pre-tax profit for the business year ending this month of between 110 and 120 billion yen, down from 143 billion a year earlier, on sales of a record 3.40 trillion yen.

Zimbabwe Minister Excludes Nationalization

SALISBURY - Zimbabwe's minister of mines, Maurice Nyagumbo, was quoted Monday as saying that mining companies operating in the country need not fear state takeover.

Reacting to a nationalization call from union leaders, Mr. Nyagumbo said in an interview in the Salisbury newspaper The Herald that nationalization was against government policy. He appealed to mining companies to carry on their work without concern.

"Nationalization for the sake of it is a form of racism and we don't want it," Mr. Nyagumbo said. "We fought against racism and we don't want it practiced in reverse. That is our stand. It is the stand of the

UAE Minister Urges 18-Month OPEC Freeze

LONDON - Oil Minister Mana Saced al-Oteiba of the United Arab Emirates has called for an 18-month price freeze by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, arguing that exporters could be in danger of pricing their oil out of the market and that OPEC needs time to reconsider its strategies.

He told a London energy symposium that the current OPEC price might be close to being realistic and that possibly "We should take it

Meanwhile, the Petroleum Intelligence Weekly said Monday that OPEC's 10 percent production cut agreed to by 10 of the 13 exporters stands a good chance "of having zero overall impact." The oil industry newsletter said the publicized cut of 1.25 million to 1.5 million barrels a day dwindles to an actual cut of under 500,000 barrels — about two percent of OPEC output — when matched against current low output levels.

Swiss Metal-Industry Health Seen Improving

ZURICH — Swiss engineering and metal-industry business in 1980 largely returned to the healthier levels of the mid-1970s after years of difficulties caused by recession and an overvalued Swiss franc, the Swiss Engineering Association said Monday.

In a review of 200 firms, it said the industry once, more had a solid basis for the future, thanks largely to stabilization of exchange rates.

Independents Complain of Belgian Steel Aid

BRUSSELS - The European Independent Steelmakers Association, EISA, called on the EEC Commission on Monday to ensure that a restructuring of the Belgian steel industry conforms to its regulations. An EISA communique bitterly criticized the Belgian government's approval of a proposal to merge the country's two biggest steel firms, Cockerill and Hainaut-Sambre, and to allow for $290 million of urgent state aid to cover future losses of the merged company.

Such a move, EISA said, ran counter to all the recent efforts by the European Economic Commission and Eurofer, the EEC steelmakers association, to set up an agreement aimed at shoring up steel prices.

BP Plugs North Sea Well After Oil Discovery

Occidental To Acquire Iowa Beef

LOS ANGELES - Occidental Petroleum has reached a preliminary agreement to acquire Iowa Beef Processors, the biggest beef processor in the United States, in an all-stock transaction valued at about $825 million, an Occidental spokesman said Monday.

The company said both boards had agreed in principle. The acquisition, if successful, will be the largest in many years by the Los Angeles-based oil giant and will diversify it in a new direction - the food industry.

The terms provide for the ex-change of 1.328 Occidental com-mon shares and 0.385 share of a new series of Occidental voting non-convertible preferred for each of Iowa Beef's 10 million outstanding common shares. Based on Occidental's closing price Friday, the securities to be issued would be worth about $77 a share.

The deal is expected to be completed within four months. If not, either party can terminate it. Iowa Beef may terminate the deal sooner if the price of Occidental common drops below $25 and Occidental may terminate it if the price of Occidental common rises

Murdock Approval

Unlike an unsuccessful Occidental move three years ago to swap $800 million worth of its stock for Mend Corp., which was fought off by the forest-products firm, the proposed merger with Iowa Beef has received a friendly reception.

David H. Murdock, the Los Angeles financier who is Iowa Beef's piggest shareholder, has said he will vote his 19-percent holding in favor of the proposed merger, Mr. Murdock is the sole shareholder of Pacific Holding Corp., which holds nearly 2 million shares of Iowa Beef through a subsidiary, International Mining Corp.

Mr. Murdock's holdings would be exchanged under the tax-free swap for about $145 million worth of Occidental securities. This is more than triple the per-share price that Mr. Murdock's firm paid when it began accumulating its large position five years ago.

Mr. Murdock is a friend of Occidental's chairman, Armand Hammer. Occidental, which has worldwide operations, ranks 20th among U.S. oil companies, with revenues last year of $12.5 billion and net income of $710 million.

Iowa Beef reported $4.6 billion sevenues and a $53-million net profit in the last fiscal year. It has had a stormy history while achieving dominance in the meatpacking business during the 1970s.

Delors Criticizes U.S. on Interest Rates

PARIS - French Finance Minister Jacques Delers has strongly criticized the U.S. policy of keep-ing interest rates high to fight domestic inflation.

He told the annual congress of the International Forex Club on Saturday that the use of interest rates to fight inflation is worsening the current economic slump and disrupting markets, and be warned that if the U.S. policy lasts too long it could have serious social and political effects in Europe. Margin Buying: Costly Spree

By Robert E. Dallos Los Angeles Times Service

NEW YORK - More investors than ever are buying stocks on margin. Margin customers in-creased borrowings to a record $14.6 billion in April, up $610 million from March.

This was the largest jump in margin debt since November. The number of margin accounts rose by 5,000 to 650,000, according to the latest New York Stock Exchange figures.

The question is whether these investors are making a potentially dangerous mistake. Observers who think so point to the near-record cost of buying on margin.

Market analysts are keeping a worried eye on the level of margin activity, on the theory that when such buying gets too feverish, it may indicate that stock prices are about to drop sharply. The risks stem from the nature of margin buy-ing, the type of investor who generally does it, and the psychology of the market itself.

Sometimes Good All Around

An investor who buys stock on margin borrows up to half the cost of his securities from his broker. The broker charges interest — currently at an annual rate of more than 20 percent — and builds the stock as security against the loan.

If the price of the stock goes up sharply, margin buying can be a good deal all around. The broker makes money on the loan because he borrows cash from the banks at the "broker loan rate," now 2014 percent, and lends it to clients at a premium of between % of a percentage point and more than two points. The difference is revenue, as well sed commissions from selling more shares than the broker otherwise would.

The investor does well in a rising market because be enjoys the leverage of controlling twice as much stock for his money as be otherwise could. For $1,000, for example, be can own 200 shares of a $10 stock - having borrowed the other $1,000 from his broker.

If the stock rises in value by 50 percent to $15 per share, the investor doubles his money. His 200 shares are now worth $3,000, and, after paying back the $1,000 borrowed from the broker on margin, he is still left with a $1,000 profit on his original investment, minus commission costs and

The risk for the margin investor is that the value of his stock will stay the same or go down. If it merely stays the same, that 20-percent-plus interest rate becomes a serious drain on his resources. If the stock goes down, the investor has paper a "margin call" from his broker, demanding that he put up more money or be forced to sell his stock at a big loss. "Margin," says a special booklet prepared by the New York Stock Exchange, "isn't a sure path to riches. It certainly is not the vehicle for the investor who is not prepared to face the possibility of severe losses in the marketplace." "People who are not averse to gambling a little bit are the margin buyers," says Vincent P. Fay, first vice president and head of the credit department of Bache Halsey Stuart Shields. "They are usually people looking for action. ... People who are looking for dividends or interest on their investments, they are not the margin buyers."

The continuing increase in the number of margin buyers indicates that thousands are ignoring such cautious advice.

Indeed, the NYSE says the quality of debt has deteriorated. The percentage of margin debt in accounts under 40-percent equity (where the customer's outstanding borrowings represent 60 per-cent or more of the value of the stock) rose from percent in March to 21 percent in April, the highest level in a year.

Pushing Margin Buying

How much a margin customer pays depends on the size of his account and often on how actively it is traded. Bateman Eichler rates to margin cus-tomers are about standard for the industry. The lowest, % of a point above the broker discount rate, is charged customers with a debit balance of $50,000 or higher. Higher rates are charged on

Of 480,000 Shearson Loeb Rhoades accounts, 22 percent are margin accounts. Bache has 500,000 customer accounts, of which 110,000 are margin accounts with outstanding debts of about

$850 million The interest revenues of Merrill Lynch, the largest U.S. broker, totaled $447.1 million in 1980, up from $340.4 million the year earlier and $113 million in 1976. It comes as no surprise then that brokers go after margin business. Some even urge customers to buy on margin. "We encourage margin debits because we do make money on them," concedes Edward J. Kopczynski, senior vice president in charge of customers for Shearson Loeb Rhoades. "Our reg-

Conoco Relinquishes Hudson's Bay Stake To Dome Petroleum

NEW YORK - Conoco said Monday that it has agreed to sell its 52.9-percent interest in Hud-son's Bay Oil and Gas to Dome Petroleum for $245 million in cash and the 22 million Conoco shares - or 20 percent of those outstanding — that Dome purchased in a recent tender offer.

In Calgary, Alberta, Dome confirmed the Conoco announcement. On Thursday Dome said it had purchased the 22 million Conoco shares for $1.43 billion.

Conoco's senior vice president, Sam Schwartz, said it expects to report a gain approaching $1 bil-lion on the sale of Hndson's Bay. He said the stock originally cost about $350 million and the tax cost of the present sale would be slight. He said Conoco bopes to complete the sale to Dome by mid-

Dome and Hudson's Bay officials are to meet at an unspecified date to discuss future operations of Hudson's Bay, which has large oil and gas interests in Canada. The agreement was reached at weekend talks between Dome and Conoco executives in Stamford, Conn., where Conoco is based.

Conoco shareholders had ignoted their directors' advice to reject Dome's $65 offer for the 22 million shares and had tendered 54 million shares to the Calgary based petroleum company. Conoco shares were to be bought on a pro rata basis to allow all shareholders to sell some of their stock.

Dome's complex share-exchange offer for the Hudson's Bay shares was billed as saving Conoco tax on the deal, an assertion that Cono-co's directors disputed.

Conoco tried to block the Dome bid in an Oklahoma City court, which refused the request for an injunction. Conoco alleged a risk of substantial tax payments and called the offer of $65 a share

"grossly inadequate."
Until the exchange agreement was signed, Dome's 20-percent interest was the largest of any single shareholder in Conoco, the ninthlargest U.S. petroleum company. Several other companies, including Husky Oil Ltd. of Calgary, negotiated unsuccessfully with Conoco for a straight takeover of Hudson's Bay.

Manufacturing Continues Slack In W. Germany

Reuters

MUNICH — The IFO economic research institute Monday reported continued deterioration of business for West German manufacturing industry in April, with demand weak and production off as order books shrank. However, the tendency to plan ontput cuts was slightly weaker than in previous surveys, possibly because firms were more optimistic about the export outlook, the institute said. It estimated that private consumer spending would contract by about 0.5 percent in real terms this year, after a 1.5-percent gain in 1980, with the retail trade likely to see a 1-percent drop in sales after the 0.3-percent increase last year. The institute called for revaluation of the Deutsche mark in the

Heavy Pressure Seen on Lira's Stability

ROME - Italy's state-sector borrowing requirement rose to 12 trillion lire ($10.43 billion) in the first quarter of this year from 4 trillion in the same 1980 period,

Delorean Mystique Aids Early Car Sales By Charles W. Stevens AP-Don Jones

Delorean dealers in the United States have received 12,000 retail orders, secured by deposits. the company said, adding that interest has been expressed in a total of 43,000 units.

At least some of the committed early buyers have been as intrigued by the Delorean mystique as by the car's racy European styling, 125-mile-an-hour performance and unique stainless-steel body. Quitting GM when, some say, the presidency was near only added to his maverick image - and his fan club.

Although out of the mainstream auto business for some time, Mr. Delorean remains remarkably visible. When he announced plans for his sports car, be promised nothing less than a socially responsible auto and a company that would show the rest of the industry "how to build cars."

When he located his factory in strife-torn Northern Ireland, aided by $120 million in incentives from the British government, more eyebrows were raised. And two years ago he became something of a media sensation when "On a Clear Day You Can See General Motors," a highly critical assessment written with his cooperation by a Detroit journalist, hit the bookstores.

Symphony for 6 cylinders in V.

The work opens with a gentlepianissimo murmur, as the 6 cylinders begin the prelude to a drive in a Renault 30TX. The first movement softly introduces us to the full range of instruments, which suggest quiet harmony and give promise of excitement to come.

As the Renault 30TX moves into a peaceful adagio, the 6 cylinders establish the theme in V, which is played with quiet legato. A pastoral interlude follows, in which long poetic passages are interspersed by bursts of allegro, interpreted with brio by the 6 cylinders.

But now comes a prolonged period of open road, giving the 6 cylinders full scope to demonstrate their agility and staying power. The extraordinary verve of the work is revealed in this sustained prestissimo, in which the sound paradoxically stays continuously below mezzoforte level.

For the real connoisseur, this is the movement that best demonstrates the brilliant genius of this symphony for 6 cylinders in V by Renault 30TX.

A score of Western and Third World leaders are expected in Mexico in a bid to seek ways of Mercaco in a bad to seek ways of closing the gap between rich and poor nations. Their talks will be based on the findings of the report issued last year by the North-South commission, headed by former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt. Salvadoran Alert Called in Strike

United Press International

SAN SALVADOR — El Salvador's military forces went on alert
Monday to guard against possible guerrilla attacks during a bus strike that has cut service by 70 percent.

The vehicles were parked by owners demanding higher fares and government subsidies for their fuel and replacement parts. Many Salvadorans managed to get to work despite the strike, riding in privately owned pickup trucks that took over the bus routes.

about a young Jewish novelist rather like Philip Roth who has just published a wildly successful book called "Carnovsky." which is rather like "Portnoy's Complaint." ft's a fine idea: It gives Philip Roth an opportunity to play with celebrity, writers and readers, truth and fiction.

Nathan Zuckerman finds that literature makes strange bedfellows. Like his book, he has become everybody's property. He has written a novel about such familiar subjects as sex and families and now that familiarity breeds contempt of a sort. Zuckerman finds it impossible to dissociate himself from his fictions. He is accused of doing what he only imagined. Now, when he walks down the street, everyone he meets is a literary critic. He is the voyeur vu.

When we meet Zuckerman, he is suffering from the sense of anticlimax that comes with success. There are no perfect readers: Every serious novel is perfect readers: Every senious novel is misread in varying degrees. Or perhaps it is only after you have published a best seller and read all the reviews that you realize you did not do exactly what you intended. Also, "Carnovsky" was an ironical book and the ironical thing about irony is the that those closest to you usually take

On the basis of their dual celebrity, a famous actress grants Zuckerman a night in her bed. The next day she stands him up in order to fly to Cuba to see her real lover, Fidel Castro.
Zuckerman discovers that literature is not as potent as politics. Except for the actress and Zuckerman's mother, all the other women — his three for-mer wives — are offstage voices. His mother is a little too good to be true: She keeps using the word "darling" seriously, as if Zuckerman, or Roth, would like to quote her on the dust iacket of the novel.

Alvin Pepler, the only other major character in "Zuckerman Unbound," has a photographic memory, which may be Roth's comment on reality unmediated by art. Alvin was the bona fide hero of a TV quiz show until the producers forced him to give way to a prototypical WASP who had to be fed the answers. Roth seems to be saying that authenticity is not always dra-

Pepler pursues Zuckerman, first fawning on him and then accusing him of stealing his life for his book This is the jealousy ordinariness feels for fame. Though he is an ingenious symbol, Pepler is too monohithic, too quickly comprehended, and that is a weakness in the book. Except for Pepler, Zuckerman contends only with himself much of the time, and while Roth manages this with wit and grace, it is generally true that we are most appealingly ourselves when we are with someone else.

Roth's voice is convincing and emo-tionally charged. It is just a bit too easily recognizable, though, like a trademark. It seems to be pitched just a little too high up in the sinuses, too reedy with ironic incredulity. Roth is old enough now to be past some of these astonishments. It may be time for him to start talking from the diaphragm. At the end of the book, Zucker man's father dies and we can see that Philip Roth can still conjure with families. His father's last word to Zuckerman is indistinct: It sounds like "bastard," but that would be too literary, he thinks. Can he be saying "faster," or "vaster," or "better"? Now that their pacifying father is dead, Zuckerman observes to his brother, "We can all be as cruel as we like."

But "Zuckerman Unbound" is not cruel — or even cruelly witty. It is almost as if the author of "Portnoy's Complaint feels that he owes us a debt of inhibition. The new book is reasonably funny, reasonably sad, reasonably interesting, and, occasion-ally, just plain reasonable.

THE CHANEYSVILLE INCIDENT By David Bradley. 432 pp. $12.95. Harper & Row, 10 E. 53d St., New York.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

HISTORY is just one long string of atrocities," observes the narrator of David Bradley's pow-erful new historical novel, "The Chaneysville Incident." "You could say history is atrocious. The best way to find out what they did is to find out where they hid the bodies." And indeed that is what this novel confronts — a search for and discovery of where they hid the bodies. On a cold March night in 1979, John Washington, a professor of history at a prominent Philadelphia university, gets news that Jack Crawley is mortally ill and asking for him. So John hops but to the real Pennsylvania town a bus to the rural Pennsylvania town where he was born and raised, and heads for the shack in the black section where Crawley, the town's quaint shoeshine "boy," lies dying. There, with the help of a deathbed story Old Jack tells about how he and John's father, Moses Washington, once foiled an attempt at a lynching, the past of John and his family comes to life again.

John realizes that he can't return to Philadelphia until he understands why his father, Moses, died in a hunting accident 22 years earlier, when John was only a boy of 9. So after Old Jack Crawley dies, John moves into his shack, and with the aid of memory, historical analysis and the prompting of his white lover, Judith Powell of the distinguished Virginia Powells, he finally arrives at and confronts the "incident" that occurred at the nearby town of Chancysville over a hundred years before.

There are any number of things in this novel that are superbly handled by Bradley, who himself comes from a western rural section of Pennsylvania and teaches English at Temple University in Philadelphia. There is the convincing portrait of the narrator's father, Moses Washington, a woodsman and cardsharp. There is a very good toker came in which Moses good poker game in which Moses demonstrates the high quality of his moonshine whiskey as well as his ability to cheat at cards - and in which Bradley makes it seem as if small fortunes are changing hands when in fact the ultimate winner will have made no more than $20.

Solution to Previous Puzzie

There is the skill with which the narrator's attitudes are checked and balanced — the way his pedantic his-toricism is gradually eroded by his intuitive understanding of the past; and the way his bitterness toward white people is softened by his eventual re-conciliation with the long-suffering Judith Powell.

Finally, there is the artistic finesse with which Bradley equates the tracking of animals with the hunting of the significant past. This symbolization very nearly works, and insofar as it does it's perhaps the book's strongest point. But it also falls just short of success, and to the degree that it fails it is the book's most disappointing

There is a minor weakness too - a tendency to overdo certain speeches and scenes. And there are weaknesse barely worth quibbling with -principally the description of a private li-brary that in 1961 contains books by Langston Hughes and Countee Cullen and William Melvin Kelly and Paul Laurence Dunbar and all the rest," when in fact William Melvin Kelley did not publish his first novel. "A Different Drummer," until 1962.

But the tracking symbols are of real consequence to a reading of "The Chancysville Incident." In learning to hunt deer, especially by listening to the wind, John Washington comes to trust his intuition. In learning to trust his intuition, he arrives at an understanding of the past. For intuition, at least for the black hero of the novel, is the key to an African religious tradition in which people did not die, but instead "took up residence in an afterworld that was in many ways indis-tinguishable from his former estate." Thus intuition enables John Washington to hear the voices of the past speaking in the wind; and it is these voices that reveal to him what really happened at Chaneysville.

The problem is, this religious mystification ultimately seems like nonsense — at least it does so to a reader who, boxed in by Western rationalism as he is, lacks any emotional access to the voodoo tradition that the author is invoking. Bradley would no doubt respond that this criticism is exactly what is meant to be impaled by the point of his story — that is, it is precisely this cause and effect mode of thinking that his hero so successfully learns to surmount. That's fine if you can go with the hero, as many will no doubt be able to do with ease, if only for ideological reasons. But for anyone stuck with the notion that intuition follows from reason instead of preceding it, as this reader happens to be, "The Chaneysville Incident," for all its effectiveness, will finally seem a little alien

BRIDGE

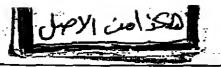

A SIMPLE calculation of point to-tals is not entirely satisfactory in a bidding system. Some may do better by locating particular cards. And standard bidders may succeed by a slower approach, perhaps the Gerber conventions.

On the diagramed deal, North and South used Gerber and located all the aces and kings before bidding six notrump. This was intended as a suggestion for a grand slam. With a maximum including a full collection of queens and no jacks, South continued. Looking at the North-South hands, there are three chances: to score four there are three chances: to score four diamond tricks, a 61 percent chance; a 3-3 heart split; or a squeeze. When South cashes his black-suit winners, East must unguard one of the red suits. The diamond jack fell. It would have been an injustice if the grand slam had failed, for its chance of success was more than 80 percent.

LOS ANGELES - Forty years ago Tuesday, an American hero died .

Never mind that Lou Gehrig hit 493 home runs, drove in 184 runs in 1931, hit 350 from 1927 to 1937 or had 200 or more hits in eight seasons. He played in 2,130 consecutive baseball games.

Today, more than 42 years after Gehrig took himself out of the lineup, it remains one of the most treasured records in American sports.

Between 1891 and 1900, about 500,000 German immigrants arrived on the shores of the United States. Two of them, Heinrich and Christina Gehrig settled in New York City's upper Manhat-tan: Gehrig was a leaf hammerer for metal sculptors. His wife was a domestic.

American Dream

In 1903 they had a son and began to dream an American dream for their squarish, stocky boy. He would go to Columbia University and become an engineer, they decided.

Papa Gehrig parily because he developed a fondness for pinochle and beer at neighborhood taverns, was often out of work. Mama Gehrig. partly because she wanted to keep an eye on her partly because she wanted to keep an eye on her son's study habits, became a cook at Lou's college fraternity house. Phi Delta Theta. Later, Papa Gehrig became the janitor at the fraternity house. By this time, an activity Mama Gehrig viewed as an evil had crept into their lives — baseball. Even at 15, Lou Gehrig could hit a baseball 400

When he told his mother in his junior year at Columbia that he had signed a contract with the Yankees, she cried.

Two years later, on June 2, 1925, he began at age 21 the playing streak that would endure until May 2, 1939. For 2,130 games, nothing kept him out of the lineup — not broken fingers, broken ribs, colds, flu, lumbago, headaches, pulled ham-strings or sprained ankles.

Late in his career, Gehrig was X-rayed. The Yankees' doctor saw on Gehrig's hands 17 bone fractures that had healed by themselves.

In 1933, Gehrig broke Everett Scott's major league record of 1,307 straight games. He would keep going for six more years.

By the late 1930s, Lou Gehrig was America's iron man. The Iron Horse, they called him. Inde-structible. Invulnerable. He'd be straightening horseshoes at 80, they said.

He was powerfully built — 6-1 and a well-mus-cled 210 pounds. He was quiet and shy. His team-mates teased him for his penurious habits. A light tipper, they said.

In 1938, he held out for a salary of $40,000. He didn't get it. He settled for $39,000; his highest salary as a Yankee.

Voluntary End

Then the decline. The disease that would kill him was at first unseen. His batting average tumbled from 351 in 1937 to 295 in 1938. But he was now 34, and he blamed the slump on age.

Don't Laugh at the Bill Kilmer League

By William N. Wallace New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The American Football Association is often described as the Bill Kilmer League, which cannot be entirely fair be-cause the AFA has been around since 1977. But this is its first season with Kilmer, the former professional quarterback, as its commissioner and with its first two franchises in major league cities, Chicago and Dallas.

Kilmer, who joined the AFA last February, is also the league's chief salesman, and he is enthusiastie as well as realistic. The AFA, whose regular season covers 12 weeks, offers pro football in the summer months when competition from the National Football League or the colleges is either nonexistent or minimal and when stadium facilities are available. Kilmer is convinced there is plenty of room in America for more football.

Happy With 20,000

"The Fire opens at bome in Chicago's Soldier Field next Saturday night," said Kilmer from league headquarters in Dallas. "They tell me they might draw a crowd of 40,000. I bope they're right, but I'd be pleased mith 2000. "These ascu will zu,uuu. teams are going to play good, en-tertaining football," he said. "The Kilmer was realistic when be said: "What we don't have is a television contract, and that's important if we are to survive. I oined the league because I was promised there would he televi-sion. The deal fell apart just a couple of weeks ago. But I'm not leav-

The Mizlou Television Network was the one that attempted to put the AFA on the air. Bill Creasy, a Kilmer friend and former producer of NFL games, is now pursuing the television money from independent stations or cable sys-tems. It has occurred to Kilmer that if a long baseball strike were to come about, summertime pro football could provide some needed programming

But I think the best way we can make it is as a developmental league for the NFL," Kilmer said.

Kilmer, who is 41, wound up his 16 seasons in the NFL with the Washington Redskins in 1978. It was his observation that many NFL teams are always looking for players as their season begins early in September. "That's when our season is finishing up," he said. We'll have players in great shape who have been proving themselves all summer."

For anyone who was watching Saturday while Cornelius Boza-Edwards took fungo practice on Bobby's comely bead, it was oot difficult to understand wby. There are many pleasanter ways to earn a living, including being shot out of a cannoo at county fairs.

Cornelius Boza-Edwards is not a household name in the United States, and perhaps not in his native Uganda or his present base in England, either. Like virtually all carnivores chosen to perform on television, be is a world champion — the proprietor of the World Boxing Council's version of the super-feath-erweight title. Super-featherweights, who may weigh as much as 130 pounds, used to be known as junior lightweights, and some highly competent gladiators held the title — men named Johnny Dundee and Ben-ny Bass and Kid Chocolate and Sandy Saddler.

Worse Than Halitosis

However, it was decided a few years ago that there was some faintly disparaging implication in the term, "junior." so junior lightweights became super-feath-erweights. O tempora! O mores! And defend yourself

Bozz-Edwards is a southpaw, which used to be regarded as worse than halitosis in a fighter unless his name was Lew Tendier. However, performers like Marvin Hagler and Ayub Kalule have given the breed a degree of respectability, and Boza-Edwards demonstrated that he is both brave and resilient. A sucker for a right-hand lead, he took scores of clean hits from Chacon and, though he once swayed like smoke, be rode out the ministorms easily.

In the late rounds he was swatting Chacon's head like a gym fighter working on the small bag. It was too much for the people in Chacon's corner, who sued for peace after 13 rounds. We don't see much of the little guys in these times, Pep and Saddler. That is our loss, for men small enough to ride in the Kentucky Derby can make boxing an art form that is beyond the reach of the most agile heavyweight.

Pep was one of the great creative artists of our time. In one of his 241 matches, he agreed privately to see if he could get through one whole round without throwing a single punch, and still win the round on the official scorecards. He put on a dazzling display of awarding himself a verdict of not guilty.

Pediagon orners, reversing men judg- menoship treaty with Moscow." in the relationship.

footwork, feinting, ducking and whirling, and all three judges scored the round for him. Neither Boza-Edwards nor Chacon would bear comparison with Guglielmo Papaleo, but they gave the Las Vegas witoesses their money's worth. (Coosidering that most eye wimesses at those shows get their tickets free from the casinos they patronize, their money isn't worth much.) Chacon is a smiling, light-hearted gentleman of 29 with no great enthusiasm for the Spartan life. When he broke in with 17 knockouts in his first 19 fights, be became a demigod in southern California but be oever wanted to pay the price in self-denial that his merciless craft demands.

He won and lost the WBC featherweight title, retired two or three times, and the match with Boza-Edwards was his most recent attempt at a comeback. For a while it looked as though the comeback might be successful, but Boza-Edwards is too tough for gentlemen past their prime. Chacon and Boza-Edwards were not the only battlers whose truculence enlivened the weekend. For the first time since he bung one on a marshmallow sales-man and knocked himself out of the Yankee organization, bodacious Billy Martin bumped hellies with Terry Cooney, an umpire, and got himself suspended as manager of the Oakland A's. Billy had been on uncommonly good behavior this season, but he was watching the A's absorb their ninth consecutive defeat, and adversity's sweet milk must have been turning. Scampering out to debver a critique of Cooney's judgment on balls and strikes, he collided with the umpire abdomen-on, kicked dirt on the magisterial shoes, then scooped up handfuls of earth and flung them at the Solomonic stern.

The Manager's Case

"We permit dissent," said Lee MacPhail, president of the American League, "but not physical contact."
Adding that the umpires' reports did not suggest that the contact had been accidental, Lee declared Martin and haven't since the days of Chalky Wright, Willie suspended even before seeing tapes.

in rebuttal, Billy recalled George Steinbrenner's recent diatribe about the same umpiring staff. Martin said Steinbrenner's remarks, made publicly and widely published, constituted a more grievous offense than anything be had done. He said that in deciding against penalizing Steinbrenner, MacPhail was operating under a double standard

"I really think he [Cooney] bumped me," Billy said, would go to the athlete and not the team, according to Kilmer. "There is a tremendous inducement," be said. "Our teams began their train-, ing camps the first of May, and we have had several tryouts. There would be up to 250 players at these tryouts. Some of them were real players too."

Kilmer recalled that in his early ears with the Redskins, the coach, George Allen, was a proponent of tryouts. From them, Allen discovered among others Herb Mul-Key, a kick-return specialist on the 1973 Super Bowl squad.

They Love It'

Kilmer acknowledged that no player is likely to get rich in the AFA, but that everyone is equal, In lieu of any salary, the players, 37 on each team, are paid I percent of the total from the gate receipts of each game.

"No exceptions," Kilmer said.
"Sure they accept it. They love it."

Of course, Mr. Secretary.

The United States thinks you may have overreacted, particularly ce the oews of the destruction of the village has gotten into the American oewspapers.

That is because you don't have press censorship in your country as we do here. We know how the story got out and we have taken measures against the exiles in the Unit-

The Rewards of Genius

NEW YORK — Most people would probably be elated if someone dropped $128,000 into their laps. Stephen Wolfram is politely appreciative, but beyond that he tends to regard the news of the windfall as an intrusion nn his consuming preoccupation; trying to figure out how the universe works. "When they phoned the other day in tell me about the prize, I was going out the door to discuss some ideas at lunch with some of the nther people here," he said in Pasadena, Calif., "so I wasn't all that pleased, really."

Wolfram, a research associate in physics at the California Institute of Technology, was among 21 "exceptionally talented indi-viduals" in various walks of life recently named as the first beneficiaries of a new awards program by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation nf Chicago.

Outright Gifts

The awards, which range from $24,000 to $60,000 a year for five years, are outright gifts with no requirements, made to people "who have given evidence of originality, dedication to creative pursuits and capacity for self-direction," the foundation said.

Wnifram, at 21 the youngest of whitrain, at 21 the youngest of the recipients, will get $24,000 a year for five years and boouses under a complicated system based on age. The eldest of the people chosen so far in what the foundation called a "search for geniuses" is the oovelist and critic Robert Penn Warren, 76, who will receive the maximum grant of $60,000 a year. Others chosen include:

Robert Coles, 51, the child psychiatrist and writer who won a Pulitzer Prize in 1973 for his series of books called "Children in Crisis," dealing with the problems of youngsters of various ethnic and cultural backgrounds.

· Stephen Jay Gould, 39, a professor of geology at Harvard University who has written ex-tensively in the field of paleontology and published an influential work analyzing theories of

• Leslie Marmon Silko, 33, a Pueblo Indian who has won honors for her poetry, filmmaking and plays. She is an assistant professor of English at the University of Arizona.

• Roy Mottahedeh, 40, professor of Islamic history and Near Eastern languages at Princeton University.

The foundation was established in 1978 after the death of John D. MacArthur, the hillionaire owner of Bankers Life and Casualty Co. With about $40 million a year to give away, it is the fourth largest fnundation in the United States. Last year it purchased Harper's magazine when the publication was nn the brink nf collapse.

John Roderick MacArthur, son of the founder and one of the foundation's six directors, said of the "search for geniuses":

"This program is probably the best reflection of the rugged indi-vidualism exemplified by my father — the risky betting on indi-vidual explorers while everybody else is playing it safe on annther track. If nuly a handful [of the recipients] produce something of importance — whether it be a work of art or a major hreakthrough in the sciences - it will be worth the risk."

Wnlfram does not know who nominated him for the prize, but a number of people at Cal Tech were advisers to the foundation.

Wnlfram, who graduated from Oxford University in England at 17 and got his doctorate at Cal Tech, spends most of his time in thought and calculations in a plain, 12-foot-square nifice equipped chiefly with bookshelves a desk and a computer terminal and printer. He is among half a dozen Cal Tech professors and researchers whn specialize in a field called quantum chromodynamics.

He finds it difficult to describe his field much more specifically than to say that it deals with the particles of which matter is composed and the forces that act upon them - things like quarks and glunns and the still-mysterious phenomenon of gravity.

Daily Routine

"When I first went to school, they thought I was behind," he said, "because I didn't want to read the silly books they gave us. And I never was able to do arithmetic." But when he got into higher mathematics, he realized there was an invisible world that he wanted to explore.

Another winner is Gregory V. Chudnovsky, 29, a Soviet-born mathematician who was dropped from his academic posts in the Soviet Union when he sought to emigrate. Chudnovsky and his hrother, David, also a mathematician, are research associates at Columbia University.

"The grant is what we needed to continue our research," said David, 34. "We hope to stay and work at Columbia."
